Help Save Our Borneo Elephants

Smaller than other Asian elephants, the Borneo elephants (Elephas maximus borneensis) are endemic to the island of Borneo and more than 90% of the species are found in Sabah.

Based on a study done by Alfred et al. in 2010, there are only about 2,040 Borneo elephants remaining in Sabah due to conversion of forests, human-elephant conflict and more recently, poaching for their tusks.

Borneo elephants are crucial for the continued existence of healthy ecosystems and biodiversity because these mega herbivores help disperse fruits with large seeds over long distances and maintain diversity of tree species.

Help WWF-Malaysia save our Borneo elephants.
